Financials

Committee Summary

Mr. Sanders suggested that Mrs. Clinton was not welcoming to child immigrants from Central America.

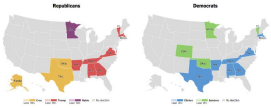
Not quite as simple.

Debating immigration records, Senator Bernie Sanders said he thought that it was a "good idea" to allow children from Honduras and other violent places in Central America to wait in the United States for a congressional hearing. Mrs. Clinton was less welcoming. "That was not, as I understand it, the secretary's position," he said.

In May 15th, Mrs. Clinton in 2014 took a position akin to that of President Obama, saying that the Central American "should be sent back as soon as it can be determined who responsible adults in their families are."

But, on the campaign trail last August, Mrs. Clinton explained that her position was based on sending a message to Central American families that the journey to the United States was fraught with danger. "If you pay the money, if you think they were kidnapped, they were held for ransom by smugglers. So I think it was the responsible message that I ... and many others, including the White House ... was trying to say to families, 'Do not let your children, your young children, do this.'"

— Glenn Cider



"When you ran against Senator Obama, you thought him naïve because he thought it was a good idea to talk to our enemies."

He left out some specifics.

Senator Bernie Sanders is recalling an exchange from 2007, when Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama were running for president. At a debate, Mr. Obama was asked if he would be willing to meet in the first year of his administration, without precondition, with the leaders of Iran, Syria, Venezuela, Cuba and North Korea. He responded that he would.

Mrs. Clinton later criticized that response.

"I thought that was irresponsible and frankly naïve to say that I'm would commit to meeting with Chavez and Castro and others within the first year," she said. "As I said last night, there needs to be a lot of diplomatic effort."

But Mr. Sanders is being imprecise about what exactly Mrs. Clinton said was naïve. She did not say it was naïve to think it was a good idea to talk to America's enemies; she said it was naïve to commit to meeting with a list of specific leaders.

— Thomas Kaplan

The Gender Pay Gap

DATA: HTTP://WWW.AAUW.ORG/FILES/2013/02/THE-SIMPLE-TRUTH_SPRING-2013.P

Political Experience

- Senator, United States Senate, 2006-present
- Representative, United States House of Representatives, 1990-2006
- Mayor, City of Burlington, 1981-1989
- Candidate, United States House of Representatives, 1988
- Candidate, Governor of Vermont, 1972, 1976, 1986
- Candidate, United States Senate, 1972, 1974
- United States Secretary of State, 2009-2013
- Sworn In, United States Secretary of State, January 21, 2009
- Senator, United States Senate, 2001-2009
- Candidate, United States President, 2008
- First Lady, President Bill Clinton, 1993-2001
- First Lady, State of Arkansas, 1979-1981, 1983-1992

"Almost all new income and wealth is going to the top 1 percent."

Depends how you do the math.

Emmanuel Saez, an economist at the University of California, Berkeley, found that from 2009 to 2014, 58 percent of the total real family income growth went to the top 1 percent of families. That's not "almost all" new income. But looking at the period from 2009 to 2012, 81 percent of income gains went to the top 1 percent, according to Mr. Saez.

— Thomas Kaplan

Close

powered by Piktochart